When I experience worry, these are some common thoughts I have:

Is this thought true?

Do I have evidence that it is true?

What is the worst-case scenario?

What is the best-case scenario?

Is there a different way to think about this?

MENTAL HEALTH

Questions to ask yourself after each thought:

Anxiety Affirmations

I am stronger than my anxiety.

This moment will pass and I will be OK.

I am safe, there is no danger here.

WORRY: A cognitive action when your mind dwells on negative thoughts. Worry can sometimes be good when it motivates us to problem solve or take action.

STRESS: A physiological reaction to an external stressor. Activates adrenaline and cortisol to help our body deal with a threat. Acute stress wears off once the situation resolves but chronic stress can have long-term negative effects on our health.

ANXIETY: This happens in both your mind and your body when you are dealing with a lot of worry and a lot of stress. It is a fight/flight/freeze reaction but there may not be real threat. There is a difference between feeling anxious on occasion and having an anxiety disorder.

Give Thanks

In positive psychology research, gratitude is strongly and consistently associated with greater happiness. Gratitude helps people feel more positive emotions, appreciate good experiences, improve their health, deal with adversity, and build strong relationships. Write down the things you are thankful for today.

Thank You

Think of someone that has helped you and write them a heartfelt thank you. Use your own words but be sure to include the following:

- ◆ The specific ways this person helped you
- ◆ How this person's help benefited you
- ◆ How this person's help made you feel

Dear _____

Gratefully,

Mindful Breathing

Paying attention to your breath and learning how to manipulate it is one of the most effective ways to lower everyday stress levels and improve a variety of health factors ranging from mood to metabolism. Mindful breathing techniques can help clear your mind, calm your body, and restore your focus.

Square Breathing

While tracing your finger around the square:

- breath in through your nose for a count of 4
- pause and hold breath for 4
- slowly breath out for 4
- pause and hold breath for 4

Repeat sequence at least 3 times .
